SMALL-TOWN EDITOR SCOOPS CITY CHAPS

From the Rouyn Press

So many readers have rung up to ask how it was the Press was able to secure an interview last week with Lord Rothermere, when even the leading metropolitan dailies were reporting that the visiting newspaper magnate was firmly refusing to say anything for publication, that while, at the time, we considered the inclden purely a part of the regular routine, we are now quite puffed up about it and inclined to strut a bit. Just how it came about that the Press was able to "scoop" its contemporaries in this instance we are frankly unable to say with certainty. For all we know, it may have been merely whim on the part of the distinguished English visitor that prompted him to single out the Press for favor. The Ottawa Journal and other ger of the Hollinger Mines, neither "THE SUN and the SEA" by Ruby paper seems to have got anything out

In our own case we were well aware of the fo per Harold Harmaworth's reputation as a difficult man "Asylum" by William Seabrook to interview, and with that in mind ger of Noranda Mines, with whom we knew the party was dining.

"THE WEDDING," by Denis Mac- of a great railway during the Nine- be done about it. Thereupon the Press went home, put on its best bib and tucker, and goose grease in its hair, and camped by the side of the telephone on the chance of a possible invitation to join the visiting celebrities and their host in their post prandial cigars.

That invitation being not forthcoming after the space of about three hours, resource was again made to the telephone, and this time Mr. Roscoe advised that he had conveyed our wishes to Lord Rothermere, who would see a representative of the paper at his private car in the morning. That being settled, the Press got back into its working clothes, repaired to the basement, split kindling for the breakfast fire and went to bed with a cheerful spirit.

Bright and early in the morning with the thumb marks carefully eras. ed from its remaining carte de viste, the Press presented itself at the portal of Lord Rothermere's private car, where it was given a warm welcome, introduced to the various members of the viscount's suite, invited to draw up a chair and say what it had on its mind. Not only that, but a 20-minute chat failing to clean up all the questions and answers before his lordship had to keep another engagen at, the Press was extended a cordial invitation to lunch and to talk of less mundane affairs, an invitaton which had regretfully to be declined because of the imminence of the paper's "dead line," as explained last week.

Easiest to Interview

While on the subject of interviews it might be said that it is the experience of the Press staff over a long period of years in which they have had occasion to talk with prophets, priests and kings, not to mention per inisters and pugilats, _rs the most important people with are easiest to interview It is from the pot-house politician and "fish and chip" capitalist that the newspaperman gets most of his rebuffs.

Only a few days ago we had occasion to seek information from mall-time mining man who used to manage a property in the vicinity of Rouyn and who now makes his headquarters in the Amos ares. Notwithstanding the fact that, when he is working, he is employed by companies who seek financial support from the ger ral public, who are entitled to know something about his activities, all we succeeded in getting from him was a string of oaths that would have shamed a Billingsgate fish porter.

He was an exception, however. On the whole the mining men, both the prospectors and the technically trained engineers and geologists. are always ready to give the news. papermen a kindly hearing.

But even when the reporter's victim refuses to talk, one can gen. erally manage to get a story out of him, Recently the Press put together three-quarters of a column of quite readable copy at the expense of visiting officials of the civit aviation branch of the Department of National Defence who seemingly had been deprived of their power of speech.

Good horses are a valuable asset to farmers in the St. Catharines district and some excellent prices are being paid for ordinary farm and teamster classes. Invention Allows 'Stomach Fishing'

Chicago. - Surgeons can 'go fishing" in the human stomaca with a novel instrument announced recently in the journal of the Am rican Medical Association.

The invention, developed by Dr. Gabriel Tucker, of Philadelphia, is reported as the newest method of removing foreign objects patients have swallowed In effect, the instrument is a tie; pair of pliers hidden in the end of a long rubber tube that can be lowered into the stomach and moved about until the "catch" is "hooked."

It is a sequel of Dr. Tucker's development a year ago of a method of locating fereign hodies in the stomach by introducing an opaque feeding tube through the esophagus and illeminating and infinting the stomach.
